Assisted Week Reflection

We appreciate our assisted living team!

Wow, what a big fish you caught!

Fun on Beach Day!

Wild World: Opossum

Whether you find them strangely cute or a little spooky, opossums (also called “possums”) are fascinating critters. They’re the only marsupial species native to North America, and like raccoons, they’ve become a common fixture in residential areas. When afraid, the animals are known for “playing possum,” or pretending to be dead by collapsing and staying in a trance until the threat is gone. More commonly, an opossum will bare its toothy grin and hiss to scare away enemies. Their resistance to many diseases is another defense mechanism, as is their immunity from certain snakebites—a discovery that’s led to research into the development of synthetic antivenom medicines.

Full Moon Fatigue

If you’re tired from a restless night’s sleep, the moon may be to blame. Research shows people report more trouble getting to sleep and staying asleep during a full moon than during other moon phases, but the exact reasons why are unclear. Scientists speculate it could be due to an internal body clock that is synchronized with lunar cycles.
